Dear Friends,

Twenty-five years ago, a phone call changed my life.

It was 1985. The Ms. Foundation for Women was small but mighty, each day connecting to new organizations led by women determined to use their power to transform the lives of women and girls. I was busy building the nascent but burgeoning movement for women’s economic development and justice. I knew about the Ms. Foundation, and knew that it was the right place for me to pursue my work—I just didn’t yet know what path would lead me into its arms.

The answer to that question came when I took a phone call from Marie Wilson, now my long-time colleague, and then the Foundation’s brand new executive director. She invited me to join her on a journey to catapult the economic security of women and girls, harnessing their power to create the change their communities yearned for. It was a journey, she said, that had the potential to change millions of lives—not least among them, as it turned out, my own.

How could I say no to that?

I said yes! In the nearly twenty-five years that have passed, I have felt enduring gratitude for the opportunity to work with the extraordinary and passionate team of women and men that is the Ms. Foundation for Women.

In my time here, I have worked side by side with thousands of women activists and organizers. They know better than anyone else what they and their communities need, and deserve, to thrive. I have benefitted beyond measure from their wisdom, and from the wisdom of my many colleagues at the Foundation and in the larger worlds of social justice and philanthropy. I cherish these relationships.

The Foundation has always put its trust in women, investing in social justice pioneers—especially women from low-income communities and communities of color—who have the vision and drive to fight for justice.

As I prepare to leave my beloved Ms. Foundation, I know without a doubt that women hold the key—and the power—to transform our world. Immersed in our work over all these years, I have witnessed, again and again, the transformational power of women and girls. One of my most powerful memories will be the extraordinary courage and commitment of the women on the Gulf Coast as they responded to disaster and stepped up to lead the long, arduous process of rebuilding their communities.

I will take these deeply moving experiences, and all that I have learned at the Ms. Foundation, into my future work. While my decision to take this next step in my journey was not an easy one, my belief that the Ms. Foundation is poised to embrace the creativity and innovation that new leadership will bring spurred me on.

As we move forward, the Ms. Foundation will do what it has always done; lead the way forward, propelling our institution—and the women’s and social justice movements—to new heights.

The Foundation’s new leader will inherit an organization poised to achieve great things, and will benefit greatly from an infusion of resources with which to move quickly and boldly. Our Leading the Way Fund will enable the Foundation to map new pathways in a shifting landscape; pioneer work at the connection of issues, movements and constituencies; and raise awareness of our impact on, and advancement of, progressive movements.

As I was invited all those years ago, I invite you, now, to lead the way with the Ms. Foundation. Please say yes to an investment in our Leading the Way Fund, partnering with our new leader to create the just and safe world we all desire.

Thank you, from the bottom of my heart, for your partnership and your friendship. They have meant the world to me as I have worked, every day, to lift up the transformational power of women and girls.

Sincerely,

Sara K. Gould
PRESIDENT & CEO
SEPTEMBER 2010
LEADING THE WAY
ADVANCING THE WOMEN’S AND SOCIAL JUSTICE MOVEMENTS

For nearly four decades, the Ms. Foundation for Women has been a pioneering voice for social justice and the leading national public foundation committed to building the collective power of women to create positive social change.

When we began our work in 1972, women were almost totally excluded from public life. From the town council to the Supreme Court, and from the locker room to the board room, women were quite simply invisible. The real problems women confronted went largely un-named. Terms like “domestic violence,” “sexual abuse” and “sexual harassment” did not even exist. Title IX had just been enacted, and it was nearly impossible for a woman to get a business or home loan in her own right name.

Together with our donors and grantees, we’ve made enormous strides fighting for a just and safe world where power and possibility are not limited by gender, race, class, sexuality, or age. We have consistently pioneered innovative strategies, taken smart risks, and led on the most critical issues of our time—from gender-based violence prevention, HIV/AIDS and girls’ healthy development to women’s economic security, reproductive justice, and a just recovery on the Gulf Coast.

We’ve also learned first-hand about the intractable problems that confront too many women and girls, our country and, indeed, the world.

In today’s fast-paced and complex environment, we are reminded that opportunities for innovation most often present themselves in just such challenging times, if one is willing to welcome and embrace change. Change in thought. Change in action. Change in leadership.

The Ms. Foundation for Women was founded in a time of dramatic societal change. We have championed that change and taken it miles further, on a constantly shifting social, economic and political landscape.

Now, the Ms. Foundation for Women is changing. As Sara Gould departs the Foundation after a 24 year tenure, we are poised to capitalize on the accomplishments made possible by the Foundation’s unique and visionary leadership during the last quarter century. Together, our staff, board and grantees are working to facilitate a smooth transition that maintains the continuity, integrity and quality of the Foundation while setting the stage for the next president to bring new creative energies and strategic vision.

During this time of change, we will do what we have always done: lead the way forward, propelling the Foundation—and the women’s and social justice movements—to new heights. As an essential resource during this time of transition, we are establishing the Leading the Way Fund, which we will invest in mapping new pathways in a shifting landscape, pioneering work at the connection of issues, movements and constituencies, and raising awareness of our impact on, and advancement of, progressive movements.

With our deep gratitude for your past generosity, we invite you to join us now in the Leading the Way Fund. As always, we can only accomplish our common vision with your partnership.
“The Leading the Way Fund is a key investment to move social justice work forward in a time of great challenge and opportunity in our society. I hope you will join me in making a significant gift to the fund.”

—Cathy Raphael, Board Chair, Ms. Foundation for Women
“I am very proud of the work we’ve done together, and so excited to see the amazing ways it will develop and grow as the Foundation welcomes its next generation of leadership.”

—Sara K. Gould
Throughout our history, we’ve been driven by the fundamental belief that the tough challenges we face as a nation cannot be solved without the full participation and leadership of women and girls in all aspects of society.

That core belief has been championed by our president, Sara K. Gould, who has been a key leader in advancing the vision and impact of the Ms. Foundation for Women. Later this year, Sara will leave the Foundation to become the Atlantic Senior Fellow at the Foundation Center. During this two-year fellowship, she will work to increase the focus on social justice philanthropy and advance thinking in key areas, such as leadership development and grantmaking with a gender, race and class lens.

Today, as the Foundation prepares to welcome a new generation of leadership, we are leveraging the power and possibilities that present themselves during times of transition to galvanize new resources that will be essential as the new president takes up the Foundation’s important work.
The Leading the Way Fund is a two-year initiative to increase the power and impact of the Ms. Foundation for Women.

The Leading the Way Fund will invest in three interrelated areas:

Mapping the Way

Asking the question “what comes next?” is fundamental to how the Ms. Foundation for Women innovates for social impact. We have a history of independent thinking: advancing the right idea at the right time, regardless of whether the idea is popular, or even considered possible.

In the 1970s, the Foundation led other funders in support of the domestic violence shelters and rape crisis hotlines that sprung up across the country as activists named previously unspoken issues. In the 1980s, we were the first to put the words “women” and “economic development” together, creating one of the first “collaborative funds” in US philanthropy and leveraging crucial resources, over a more than 20-year period, for the growing microenterprise field.

In 1990, recognizing that states were going to be the next battleground in the fight to retain the Constitutional right to an abortion, the Ms. Foundation led other funders in support of state-level coalitions. These coalitions and organizations have, over 20 years, turned back thousands of regressive measures and lifted up the voices of low-income women and women of color, paving the road to reproductive justice approaches.

In 1993, the Ms. Foundation created Take Our Daughters to Work Day, putting girls on the national map for the first time by engaging literally millions of Americans, both adults and girls, and galvanizing new conversations at hundreds of thousands of workplaces, and in families, all across the country.

In 2005, when the levees broke in New Orleans, our Katrina Women’s Response Fund was the first to recognize the essential role that women, and particularly women of color and low-income women, would play in responding to disaster and rebuilding communities, ultimately investing $3 million on the Gulf Coast. And, early this year, we countered the conventional wisdom that the economy was improving for low-income women and people of color by undertaking and publicizing the results of a national “community voices” poll, in partnership with the Center for Community Change.

Right now, we are taking on the issue of child sexual abuse, a public health crisis that impacts one in three girls and one in six boys. In partnership with our grantees, we are piloting and evaluating new strategies to address root causes, change prevailing paradigms and engage adults and communities in a national movement to end child sexual abuse.

And, because we must end the marginalization of women and women’s organizing in progressive movements, the Ms. Foundation is mapping the way forward in the emerging arena of “gender justice.” In both our grantmaking and our strategic communications, we are demonstrating both how a gender lens can be connected to the race and class lens currently used by many progressive funders and donors, and why using a more inclusive lens results in more effective solutions.

This capacity to name issues and spot key trends and developments is essential to our success, enabling us to create and leverage our intellectual capital and our position as an innovator and thought leader. The Leading the Way Fund will provide the new president with the opportunity to move quickly in crucial arenas, assessing the changing national landscape, convening established and emerging leaders and experts, identifying obstacles and opportunities, and finding solutions.

Expanding Our Impact

Working closely with our grantee partners, we have learned that sustainable, inclusive social change results from recognizing and facilitating connections of all kinds on the ground—connections among issues, movements, constituencies and geography.

Making grants to organizations that use these connections to engage more women and men in movements for social justice—and building their organizational skills, alliances, access and power—is the foundation of our work.

Our support enables groups to:

- Organize across issues, organizations and movements to build greater power that can win progressive change and hold it in place;
- Promote inclusive solutions that take account of the combined impact of race, class and gender in communities throughout the US;
• Connect the wisdom of grassroots solutions to the power of national advocacy organizations and campaigns;

• Design strategies that both engage new constituencies and link diverse and growing constituencies together; and

• Move progressive organizing toward incorporating women’s unique leadership and lived experience.

The examples highlighted here feature only two of our many grantee partners that have moved away from working in “silos” to achieve their goals. The Ms. Foundation is one of only a few pioneering funders demonstrating the possibilities, and supporting the growth, of this important approach. We are actively engaged in learning more about its effectiveness through an organization-wide evaluation project now completing its second year.

The Leading the Way Fund will provide significant new resources to fuel the expansion of this innovative grantmaking and capacity building, achieving results that can spark further investment by a wider group of foundations and individual donors.

Elevating the Ms. Foundation’s visibility and strengthening the power and reach of our voice is not an exercise in vanity or self-promotion, but an essential component of advancing our mission.

Through Expanding the Movement for Empowerment and Reproductive Justice (EMERJ), Asian Communities for Reproductive Justice (ACJR) is coalescing Asian Pacific Islander communities into a national base of more than 70 grassroots organizations in 15 states to represent diverse points on the social justice spectrum—from immigrant and worker rights groups to youth leadership organizations. Supported by the Ms. Foundation since 2008, EMERJ looks at issues using a reproductive justice lens to create connections across issues, constituencies and geographic areas by understanding where and how seemingly disparate issues intersect with women’s reproductive freedom, particularly in communities of color.

In the last two years, we have made great strides in developing and implementing a multifaceted and integrated communications platform, using state-of-the-art tools to reach our key audiences. Our multi-media website tells our story through photography, slideshows, and video and audio components. Scanning the landscape, we use our blog and email blasts to respond rapidly to pressing issues, and we use online outreach and social marketing strategies to expand our reach.

The Leading the Way Fund will enable us to invest in proactive media outreach to first and second tier outlets, create an even more vibrant and interactive online presence, and expand our social marketing campaigns. These strategies will raise the profile of the Ms. Foundation’s grantees and our approach and impact, and create a powerful and nationally visible platform for our incoming leader.

We will increase our skills in building public will, from issue framing and messaging to harnessing the power of technology, responding rapidly to breaking news and engaging constituents and policymakers in real time. We will also invest in the strategic communications capacity of our grantees, extending our, and their, impact.

Founded in 2000, Domestic Workers United (DWU) organizes Caribbean, Latina and African domestic workers in New York to build the power of the domestic workforce, raise the level of respect for domestic work, and establish fair labor standards in the domestic work industry. A grantee partner since 2001, our support makes it possible for DWU to bring a race, class and gender lens to its work, and to build connections across programs, sectors, levels, and constituencies in bridging the long-standing separation between the labor movement and women of color. In 2010, DWU and its allies won the passage into law of the Domestic Workers Bill of Rights in New York State.

Raising Our Profile

In a world where new technologies mean that national news and policy campaigns shift in a matter of minutes rather than days, the Ms. Foundation must be highly visible and capable of influencing the dialogue on issues crucial to women and girls, anywhere and everywhere the conversation is happening. We must be proactive and vocal, letting people know who we are, what we stand for, what we’re doing and why it makes a difference.
“We feel it’s important that the people who are most directly affected are at the table at all times. The Ms. Foundation gets that. They really promote the leadership and the vision of working class women of color in the broader social justice movement. That’s a very special thing.”

—Ai-Jen Poo, Director, National Domestic Workers Alliance

Dear Friends,

We live in interesting times. With all of the media attention this year on a swell of angry, wrathful voters, one might wonder if progressive grassroots movements had lost their steam. I am here to tell you resoundingly that, no, they have not! The Ms. Foundation for Women’s grantee organizations and their allies are leading the way for social justice across the U.S., organizing for change from local communities to the halls of Congress.

The press and pundits miss another crucial point: these social justice movements are led by and for those who truly bear the brunt of our country’s economic crisis: low-income women and their families, women of color, immigrants and youth. In fact, for all the talk of a “mancession,” the prolonged downturn has hit women hard. The unemployment rate for single mothers is the highest it has been in 25 years, and women consigned for decades to low-wage jobs face significantly increased economic and care-giving problems.

The Ms. Foundation has always believed that those who live a problem every day have the wisdom and expertise necessary to solve it. We still believe it today. Women on the frontlines of the economic crisis are uniquely positioned to lead us out. And in the process they’re redefining what economic recovery should mean—quality jobs, not just any job—and who must be included: domestic workers, farmworkers and others denied the labor rights and minimum wages afforded nearly everyone else.

Whether on issues of the economy, health care, interpersonal violence or immigration, we know that women’s grassroots solutions can benefit the entire country. That’s why we’re funding creative collaborations to amplify community-based voices and vision on a national scale. Just recently we connected Restaurant Opportunities Center United—an organization with a strong grassroots base of restaurant workers in cities throughout the US—with the National Partnership for Women and Families—an organization with vast state and federal policy expertise—to work together to advance paid sick leave, a critical pillar of economic security, especially for women.

And while we partner with a dynamic network of donors and grantees to ignite change nationwide, we also embrace change here at home. As Sara K. Gould, our beloved president and CEO, leaves the Ms. Foundation to take up an exciting new chapter in her social justice career, we bid her farewell with a grateful but heavy heart. At the same time, we welcome with enthusiasm the vision and leadership our new president will bring.

Please join me in celebrating Sara’s phenomenal, nearly 25-year tenure with the Foundation, and the foundation it has laid for a very many great things ahead.

Join us as we lead the way throughout the next quarter century and beyond.

Warmly,

Cathy Raphael, Chair of the Board

MS. FOUNDATION FOR WOMEN

Women are more than half the population, yet—even with the progress of the last 40 years—they don’t have equal opportunity, voice or power. The Ms. Foundation for Women does not accept the status quo. The tough challenges we face as a nation—poverty, violence and injustice—cannot be solved without the full participation and leadership of women. We invest in the social justice pioneers—especially women from the low-income communities and communities of color most affected by these problems—who have the vision and drive to fight for justice.

Everyday, we help over 150 grassroots organizations nationwide fight for changes like good paying jobs, reproductive rights, prevention of domestic violence and the inclusion of women at decision-making tables. The Ms. Foundation has invested over $50 million and influenced other funders to support solutions from the ground up. We deliver funding, build skills and connect pioneers with allies to create change that benefits women, families and communities. Together, we work for a nation in which power and possibility are not limited by gender, race, class, or any other factor.
